Step 2: Adding seams

It's time to add our seams. As you've probably guessed, the 'sewing pattern' created by the add-on is really just a UV layout, but in 3D. So, for a good sewing pattern, we need a good UV layout.

Go ahead and add seams around your mesh wherever you see fit. Some seams will wrap nicely around the existing geometry, as is the case in the Suzanne example shown here.

This won't always be the case, sometimes you need to make additional cuts using tools like Knife K or Connect vertex path J. This will often leave you with bad geometry, as this cut creates tiny edges and triangles.

You can use the Edge > Clean up knife cut operator, which is included in this add-on, to clean fix this. Select the edge chain you wish to clean up (usually the part you just cut), and run the operator. Increase the 'Min edge length' until all the small triangles are gone. If the edge chain is crooked, you can relax it. You can also relax neighboring vertices.

On the left you can see where I added seams to the model. (tip: drag to rotate)

Unwrap the model as you normally would. It's important that your Seams always match your UVs. This is because the seams are used for cutting, but the UVs are used for unfolding. You can get an idea of how well your unwrap works by visualizing stretching.

UV Editor > Sidebar > View > Overlays > Stretching > Type: Area

If there are places that show up too green, it will apply too much tension to the fabric. Where would you add seams based on the result on the right?

Step 3: Unfold

Here comes the interesting part. If you're happy with the unwrap, it's time for unfolding. It's best to have your object scale applied at this point.

Object > Seams to Sewing Pattern > Seams to Sewing Pattern
You'll be presented with a couple of options.
